Darien Headen

PG wants to highlight Mr. Darien Headen. Mr. Headen wanted to leave our boys of color a message- "Limitless expectations! As much as society tries to, they cannot put us in one box. No narrative is the same when it comes to boys of color. They're so dynamic, multifaceted, and talented. It's super important that we expose them to the limitless possibilities. I think society often tells us things that are not true. They put stipulations on us telling us how successful we should be and that we are less than to determine our trajectory. It's essential that we continuously work to combat that.

Those who have experienced some success and are doing well, it's super important that be the champion for others. Every young boy needs a student advocate who encourages them to reshape the narrative that told."

Micheal Fulton

PG would also like to highlight Mr. Micheal Fulton for his continuous black boy joy despite adversity. He is in his 6th year of teaching, has a masters level education, and is currently working on his doctors degree in education. Micheal's joy is interconnected with his purpose, he enjoys helping his loved ones refocus and regain their purpose. He helps other black boys uncover their joy by being present and teaching them responsibility, respect, and the importance of communication.
