 The Queen New Deal

It's time to think big and be bold, Charlotte.

Ms. Johnston -

I'm Chad Stachowicz, I'm running for Charlotte City Council, and there's one thing that sets me apart from every other candidate:

I have a plan for Charlotte.

It's called the Queen New Deal, and I believe it has the potential to change the face of our city.

Read the Queen New Deal: A Plan of Action for Charlotte.

For years, we've left major problems to future generations. Charlotte has passed the buck on major structural issues including economic mobility, climate change, transportation, and affordable housing.

When the Leading on Opportunity Report came out in response to Charlotte's economic mobility crisis, it stated that "we will never make a significant impact in the [affordable housing] deficit unless we set bolder goals."

We don't have a choice: It's time to think big and be bold.

The centerpiece of the Queen New Deal is a significantly expanded commitment to fighting Charlotte's affordable housing crisis, especially in communities that have been historically denied housing due to structural racism. I'm proposing a goal to create 30,000 new home owners over the next 20 years.

Too many families see home ownership as an impossible goal, but it should be a priority for our city. Home ownership is the foundation of the American dream and our economy. Most importantly, building home equity can be an important tool for creating social and racial equity.

The Queen New Deal will also work to create a better, more transparent city government; it will focus on creating good jobs in growing sectors; it includes a plan for fighting climate change and protecting our environment; and it will transform our elections by taking special interest money out of Charlotte politics.

We should expect candidates for city council to have a plan, because it makes no sense for someone to go to all the trouble of serving on city council without knowing what they're fighting for.

I know what I'm fighting for, so I hope you'll support the Queen New Deal and support our campaign.

Thanks!
