North Carolina Treasurer JANET COWELL

This past Friday, the Opening Ceremony kicked off the 2014 Winter Olympics in Sochi. Millions from around the globe watched as competition for the gold began. Today, a different but important competition kicks off as candidates across North Carolina begin filing for office.

Running for office is an important step toward a better state. Having the right individuals serving North Carolina in the right roles can make a significant difference in our tax policy, funding public education, creating economic development strategies, and protecting the public.

On Friday, just hours before athletes from around the world marched into Fisht Olympic Stadium for the Ceremony, I was honored to help kick-off training in North Carolina for women running for office in 2014.

While the Treasurer's office is not part of the 2014 cycle, I am reminded today of why I chose to run for Treasurer in 2008, and for a second term in 2012. Our state's continued fiscal stability has never been more critical, and is something that's worth the fight to ensure for families across North Carolina.

My commitment to overcoming the challenges we face as a state and building a brighter future for North Carolina is stronger than ever.

I look forward to working with those who share this commitment to improving our state, as the people of North Carolina deserve nothing less.

So let me be among the first to congratulate and wish the best to those who step up in the coming weeks to file for office. The road may be difficult, and the competition won't yield an Olympic medal. However, working together, we can all help achieve a better North Carolina.

Thank you for your continued support!

Janet
