Governor Pat McCrory's Weekly Newsletter October 20, 2014

This week is "Safer Schools Week"

Governor Pat McCrory has asked North Carolina education, law enforcement, mental health, government and business leaders to work together with the North Carolina Center for Safer Schools to focus the public's attention on methods to ensure all state schools are safe as Safer Schools Week is observed this week, Oct. 19-25, 2014.

"The N.C. Center for Safer Schools has recently updated me on the progress it has made over the past year in partnership with state and local agencies, schools and communities to ensure our children are kept safe while they are learning," Governor McCrory said. "As we observe Safer Schools Week, I encourage all North Carolinians to become active in your children's lives and in their schools, and learn how you can help keep our schools safe and secure."

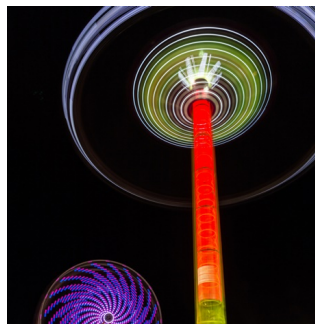

Established by Governor McCrory in 2013, the N.C. Center for Safer Schools - based in the Department of Public Safety - is a customer-focused information center for research, training and technical assistance related to school safety, crisis prevention and response.

Governor McCrory encourages North Carolinians to attend the State Fair

The North Carolina State Fair opened Thursday and Governor McCrory is encouraging citizens from throughout the state to make the trip to the fairgrounds in Raleigh to be a part of this annual state tradition.

"Come experience the rides, food and exhibits of the best North Carolina agriculture has to offer," Governor McCrory said. "The State Fair is a North Carolina tradition, and it should be one for your family as well. Not only is it fun, but it's educational as well; the Fair provides a showcase for some of our state's largest and most important industries."

Notable and Quotable

"The new plant will be the first in the world to mass produce engine components made of advanced ceramic matrix composite materials. The company says ultimately, this technology will help drive down fuel costs for airlines...And Asheville was chosen specifically, to manufacture this innovative technology. 'Oh this is huge for people in Western North Carolina. We came here specifically because of the workforce here,' says [General Manager of Rotating Parts for G.E. Aviation, Randy] Hobbs."

Governor McCrory gives update on state's Ebola readiness

While there are no known or suspected cases of Ebola in North Carolina, Governor McCrory, along with Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) Secretary Aldona Vos and State Epidemiologist Dr. Megan Davies, detailed last week the state's preparation should an Ebola case be diagnosed in North Carolina.

"For months, Secretary Vos and her team have been diligently working with medical providers, county health departments and the military to be prepared should an Ebola case be diagnosed in North Carolina," Governor McCrory said. "We are in constant contact with our federal, state and local partners to be on top of this rapidly evolving medical situation."

North Carolina has been preparing since July for any Ebola diagnoses. DHHS has provided extensive guidance to health care providers and procedures are in place to screen and evaluate patients. Additionally, the department is actively monitoring for cases using a network of hospital-based Public Health Epidemiologists in the state's largest hospital systems and surveillance of hospital emergency department visits.

Governor McCrory visits Asheville for grand opening of GE Aviation plant

Governor McCrory traveled to western North Carolina last week to celebrate the expansion of the GE Aviation Asheville facility, which invested approximately $125 million and will create 340 jobs.

"GE Aviation is a global leader in advanced manufacturing, producing world-class jet engines and other necessary systems for aircraft," Governor McCrory said. "North Carolina is committed to maintaining and encouraging workforce development in this area, and thanks to companies like GE Aviation, we know that our talented workforce will find opportunities in our state, from the mountains to the coast. I'm thankful for the opportunity to highlight western North Carolina's economic growth and undeniable potential."

Governor McCrory offered remarks prior to the ribbon cutting. Afterward, the governor was joined by company employees and state and local officials to tour the facility and learn more about the company's
