Governor McCrory Issues State of Emergency Declaration Ahead of Arctic Blast

Governor McCrory has issued a State of Emergency declaration ahead of a winter storm that will enter North Carolina this afternoon and is expected to hit the state with snow, sleet and freezing rain.

Governor McCrory said North Carolina's State Emergency Response Team is preparing for the approaching winter storm and recommended that residents do the same.

"We are working with all necessary departments and local emergency management crews to keep residents safe and informed regarding potentially hazardous weather conditions," said Governor McCrory. "We're asking that each resident and family do the same by paying attention to the weather forecast and following instructions from local officials."

This morning, Governor McCrory signed two executive orders to expedite storm response. The State of Emergency declaration enables the governor to mobilize the necessary resources to respond to a storm and is the first step in seeking federal funds to help defray eligible storm-related costs. The executive order waives restrictions on weight and the hours of service for fuel, utility and other truck drivers that may be working to deliver supplies, restore services or clear storm debris.

Notable and Quotable

"I was very heartened to attend the press conference recently with Gov. Pat McCrory and Secretary of Cultural Resources Susan Kluttz, who are working to promote the restoration of the state historic preservation tax credits in North Carolina. It is good for everyone when people of varied political persuasions agree on a public policy that has a proven record of success. I hope the NC General Assembly will recognize the value the tax program has provided North Carolina communities."

Governor McCrory emphasizes need to reinstate Historic Tax Credit during visit to Rocky Mount

Governor McCrory visited Rocky Mount on Thursday with Secretary of Cultural Resources Susan Kluttz to discuss the need to reinstate the Historic Tax Credit. The governor and Sec. Kluttz visited Rocky Mount Mills, the Helen P. Gay Historic Rocky Mount Train Station and Douglas Block, all of which were revitalized by the Historic Tax Credit.

"By preserving the Historic Tax Credit, we can recreate Rocky Mount's story all across our state," said Governor McCrory. "It will bring our historic buildings, and with them our own history, back to life to create jobs and prosperity."

During the tour, Governor McCrory and Sec. Kluttz visited Milton & Miles, a local eatery located in a revitalized building, and The Bath Place, a shop on the Douglas Block specializing in handcrafted beauty products.
