I marched with thousands of teachers this week

Steve -

This week I joined thousands of North Carolina teachers at the #RedForEd march in Raleigh to demand better from our elected officials.

I talked with teachers of all grade levels and backgrounds to hear their concerns and stories. As a dad of four little kids and a product of North Carolina's public schools, I understand how important our educators are in shaping the future for all of our kids.

Investing in our teachers and public schools should be a priority, but the sad truth is partisan insiders like Betsy DeVos are trying to tear down public education. They don't believe in public schools. Our teachers deserve better, and we need to have their backs.

This week, we marched. But what's even more important than marching is electing leaders who will fight to raise teacher pay, lower class sizes, open up new pathways to opportunity for our kids, and make sure that a child's education doesn't depend on their zip code.

Make no mistake, the candidates in the Republican primary are on the wrong side of these issues. So I need to ask:

Will you make a \$3 donation to our campaign today? Their primary is less than two weeks away, and we need to be ready to hit the ground running as soon as we know our opponent.

Thank you for standing with our campaign and our educators.

Dan
