Council for Children's Rights

Once upon a time, there was a young girl named Alexis who was smart, creative, and kind.

But she was also very angry.

Alexus did not have a fairytale childhood, but because of Council for Children's Rights, she has a bright future ahead of her.

By 12 she'd endured endless abuse at home and had been committed to a mental health facility. By 15 she was homeless and sleeping in parks. Alexis had fallen through the cracks of the system—and she was angry.

But her attorney at Council for Children's Rights knew that under that anger was a child fighting to be heard, seen, and understood.

This is your support in action — children reclaiming their voices, realizing their potential, and becoming the grownups that our community needs.

Alexus is currently studying early childhood education at Central Piedmont

Community College and will continue her degree at the University of North Carolina, Greensboro. She plans to be a teacher.

Alexus said if she makes a difference in just one child's life, her struggles will all be worth it.

If you think your gift doesn't matter, you're wrong. With your gift the trajectory of a child's life can change for the better — just like Alexis'. Because every child matters. That's why every gift matters, too.
