Steve -

The New York Times just called out our opponent and his DC allies for their desperate attacks against Dan. Check out the headline:

The New York Times

With Name-Calling and Twitter Battles, House Republican Campaign Arm Copies Trump's Playbook

Last fall, we saw that there's no limit to the lying and cheating politicians will use to try to win this race.

This week, The New York Times called out Dan Bishop and his DC allies for lying about Dan with smears and nicknames.

Here's the thing: They're throwing around these baseless attacks because they're desperate. They know we can win this special election.

People are tired of the name-calling and lies that dominate our politics, and they deserve better. We need leaders who will fight to fix Washington and the corruption — not someone who is content with the broken status quo.

That's what Dan will do, but he needs your help to win this race first:

Thank you for being part of this fight. Your support means the world to Dan.
