It's still time to think big

It's still time to think big and be bold, Charlotte.

Ms. Johnston -

While Tuesday's election results weren't what we wanted, I want to thank the over 12,000 Charlotteans who supported our campaign at the ballot box. Congratulations to Julie, Braxton, Smuggie, and Dimple on their hard-earned wins in the At Large race.

I wouldn't have gotten this far without all of the great friends, co-workers, and of course family in my life. Kat, Penelope, and Norah, I love you most of all.

To the rest of you who supported our campaign, I'm not going anywhere. There's still work to be done.

Our campaign was never about one person or an elected office, it was a campaign about ideas. We saw a city government that was being performative when it needed to be transformative, so we introduced the Queen New Deal: the boldest and most comprehensive policy agenda the city has seen in over a decade.

I believe it's still time to think big and be bold. Please join us in telling the Charlotte City Council that you still support the Queen New Deal.

If our city council doesn't pass a transformative policy agenda, we'll pass on major problems to future generations. When the Leading on Opportunity Report came out in response to Charlotte's economic mobility crisis, it stated that "we will never make a significant impact in the [affordable housing] deficit unless we set bolder goals."

Charlotte can't continue to pass the buck on major structural issues including economic mobility, climate change, transportation, and affordable housing.

Sign our petition and continue to show your support for the #QueenNewDeal today.

In the coming months, as the new Charlotte City Council prepares to work on its first budget, I'll be there talking with city council members and advocating for our agenda. I hope I'll be able to share your name as a supporter of the Queen New Deal.

Thanks for joining us in this fight, and thanks again to everyone who supported our campaign.

Sincerely yours,

Chad Stachowicz
