Dear Sarah,

How can communities lead public space programming and activities during a pandemic? How can urban spaces think creatively about redevelopment, operations and sustainability during major financial cuts?

On the next episode of Coast to Coast, we'll talk with world-renowned urban redevelopment expert and public space management consultant Dan Biederman. Together, we'll unpack the future of planning, designing and management of public spaces during these unprecedented times.

(Tuesday, August 18, 1 p.m. ET)

Dan Biederman is the founder and president of BRV Corp. He is also co-founder of Grand Central Partnership, the Chelsea Improvement Company, 34th Street Partnership, and Bryant Park Corporation, and currently serves as the president of the latter two downtown management organizations. Mr. Biederman and BRV consult public and private parties on, among other things, the art of downtown management, economic development, and rehabilitation in New York, Toronto, Los Angeles, Chicago, Dallas, Houston, Atlanta, Miami, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Newark, and a host of other cities in various countries.
