CHRONICLE OF PHILANTHROPY

Reimagining democracy: philanthropy's long-term role

Monday, Nov. 9, 2 p.m. ET | 11 a.m. PT

FREE ONLINE BRIEFING

Reimagining Democracy

Foundations and individuals have poured billions of dollars into efforts to strengthen democracy as crises from this year have put new strains on how America governs itself. After Election Day, philanthropy faces big, long-term questions: What steps should foundations and big donors take now to ensure our democracy serves all of its citizens well in the decades ahead? We'll have a conversation with some of the country's leading thinkers to gain a wide-ranging perspective on what matters most. In this first of two free online briefings, you'll gain access to some of America's leading thinkers whose ideas appear in "Democracy and Civic Life: What is the Long Game for Philanthropy?" a collection of essays commissioned by the Kettering and Knight foundations and released in conjunction with this briefing.

Guests

Cathy Cohen, political scientist, University of Chicago

Yuval Levin, scholar, American Enterprise Institute

Daniel Rothschild, executive director, Mercatus Center at George Mason University

Host

Stacy Palmer, editor, Chronicle of Philanthropy

Reboot 2020

Monday, Nov. 9 and Tuesday, Nov. 10

The pandemic has created new challenges, forcing Big Tech and the government to find ways to increase efficiency and tackle areas like misinformation, privacy and security. The "Reboot 2020 Conference," sponsored by Knight Foundation, brings together technologists, policymakers, founders and investors for timely discussions on backlash against tech companies, tensions between the press and tech industries and more. The final two days of the conference will include Knight experts exploring the intersection of technology, community and public policy.

Featuring

Alberto Ibarguen, president and CEO, Knight Foundation

Lilian Coral, director for national strategy and technology innovation, Knight Foundation

Paul Cheung, director for journalism and technology innovation, Knight Foundation

Presented by

Lincoln Network
