Dear Steve:

Today marked a monumental day in America's history, the inauguration of President Joe Biden and the first female Vice President, Kamala Harris! We are anticipating the changes that simply having a caring and empathetic president like Joe Biden will make.

My family and I enthusiastically cheered on Vice President Harris as she took the oath of office. I'm proud not only as a woman, an African American woman, but also of the impact she will make as the first vice president who graduated from a historically Black college & university (HBCU) which is a proud legacy we share. I know that there are millions of children, especially little girls, watching today and thinking, "If she can do it, so can I!"

Today also marks a turning of the page to a promising new chapter for our country. The last four years have been a rollercoaster ride for so many of us. With the swearing-in of this administration, we are returning to an era where scientists have a seat at the table and civility will rule the day. I expect that it will be difficult for the Biden-Harris administration to quickly get all of their ambitious goals accomplished, but I do believe that there will be transparency as they try to get things done. A truly united America will go a long way to getting our country back on track from all of the challenges of the economy and the pandemic.

So, today, we are wishing great success to our new President and Vice President. We know that they will govern with honesty, integrity and will serve all of the American people, whether they voted for them or not. The time to start the hard work to restore the soul of our nation together begins today.

Warm regards,

Cynthia L. Wallace
