This year is a critical back-to-school. While schools learn how to operate in a new environment, educators are tasked with accelerating learning to offset the impacts of potential learning loss from last year.

If 2020 taught us anything, we know that our village is what sustains us during times of uncertainty. This concept of community rings true for keeping male educators of color in the profession.

Male educators of color make up 2% of the national teaching population and leave at a rate higher than other demographics. Imagine a world where on the first day of school, a male educator of color immediately taps into a network of male educators of color to connect with WITHIN the school, feels culturally affirmed in the workplace, and accesses leadership advancement and opportunities without having to play cultural politics. We are building towards a profession committed to creating environments that make male educators of color want to stay.

Join us in our mission to keep male educators of color in education!

Be one of the 300 people to commit to supporting the 2% by giving $2/month to keep male educators of color in education?

$2/month provides five male educators of color with professional development opportunities and access to a cohort of male educators of color Join us in supporting the 2%

Will you join in and support the 2% today?
