Sign up now: Charlotte City Walks is back in person after three years

After City Walks were canceled in 2020 and virtual-only in 2021 because of the pandemic, the program is back this year. We've got a full slate of in-person walks scheduled, and we're excited to welcome people from across our community to once again gather and learn about Charlotte's history, neighborhoods and culture. Registration is open, and space is limited. See the full lineup of walks now.

Explore local housing data with new interactive maps

By Ely Portillo

We often paint Charlotte's housing market in broad strokes: rising prices, bidding wars and gentrification reshaping neighborhoods. Updated data on the Charlotte/Mecklenburg Quality of Life Explorer lets you can dig deeper into the story told by those aggregate numbers. Charlotte's neighborhoods are starkly different when it comes to characteristics such as what percentage of homes are rentals, where publicly subsidized affordable housing is located and the size of the average single-family house.

ICYMI: Facing more investor purchases, Charlotte considers tweaking housing programs

By Ely Portillo

As investors — including Wall Street-backed single-family rental companies — buy more homes across Charlotte and Mecklenburg County, the city of Charlotte is considering changes to some of its homeownership assistance programs.
