Exploring and Discovering Charlotte

In a city there are so many things, incremental changes and dynamic moments, it is impossible to see it all... there's always more to discover. Discovery, for some, is an art. It is the willingness to try something new, choosing to make the uncomfortability of newness the norm.

Research Associate Angelique Gaines appeared with community historian Tom Hanchett on a recent episode of Spoken City Podcast, co-hosted by local spoken word artists "Bluz" Boris Rogers, Hannah Hasan, and Jay (Junius) Ward.

When Rabbits Decide

By Ruth Ann Grissom

We gardeners are always striving for an ideal vision, the moment when our creations will finally reach their full, mature potential. And we foolishly assume that once they've attained it, they'll then remain in that state of perfection. But gardens aren't static. Plants don't perform as promised. We make poor choices. Conditions change.

And then there's rabbit predation.
