Steve,

Last night's debate was ... eventful, to say the least. We wanted to make sure you didn't miss this important moment, where Kamala Harris was asked about climate change and responded by bringing up insurance rate hikes. She's exactly right, and it's what Natasha has been saying all along: insurance is where climate change meets your wallet.

Like VP Harris said, insurance prices are being "jacked up" because of climate change and "we can deal with this issue" — but it has to start with electing qualified candidates who are ready to tackle ever-strengthening storms, flooding, and climate-related issues head on.

There's only one candidate in this race with a comprehensive plan to strengthen our communities against natural disasters, and that's Natasha Marcus. Natasha's plan will build real, actionable solutions that protect our homes, our wallets, and our communities from the growing threat of natural disasters. As VP Harris said, "The young people of America care deeply about this issue." We know you do too.

By expanding programs to help strengthen our homes against storms, ensuring access to coastal home insurance, educating homeowners about increased flooding risks, and modernizing building codes to make our homes energy efficient and resilient, Natasha will bring the leadership we need to safeguard North Carolina for the long-term. That's why she's endorsed by leading environmental groups like the Sierra Club, Climate Cabinet and the NC League of Conservation Voters.

To prepare for the storms ahead, we need to elect leaders like Natasha Marcus who have a plan to address these issues head on. Will you stand with Natasha and support her plan to do something about insurance prices in North Carolina?
